Strong safety culture at Corenso

What we do:

Safety has always been and will be a top priority at Corenso. We are working hard on continuously improving our safety performance and have an excellent proven track record. We have corporate-wide and transparent Organisational Health and Safety reporting in place enabling cooperation and learning across units.

Whenever a safety incident occurs, we analyse the root cause and engage in preventive actions to ensure the accident will not happen again. We also widely distribute all accident reports to allow our personnel to learn from others' mistakes. We put extra emphasis on training our team, on both supervisor and shop floor level, and encourage the participation in our safety committees where everyone can share ideas how to improve our processes further also from a safety perspective.

The results:

From 2011 to 2017, including all Corenso industrial sites worldwide, the rate of total recordable incidents (any safety issues requiring medical attention) per million working hours decreased from 19.2 to 5.7 (from 38 cases to 10), and the rate of accidents causing lost working time dropped from 11.1 to 2.3 (from 22 cases to 4). This places Corenso in the upper quartile worldwide in safety performance. Attendance rate has been improving as well, reaching 97% in 2017.

The involvement of people and the frequent safety discussions have enabled us to celebrate multiple of our core plants reaching a 5-year anniversary of lost time accident-free operations, and a number of other plants are also on the way to reach significant milestones.

Future plan:

We will continue to work towards our ultimate goal of zero safety incidents and maintain high attendance rates in all our units in 2018 and the years to come. We care about our people returning safely to their homes.
